Broad Street between Pine and Spruce Streets directly across from the Kimmel Center for the Performing Arts.

SONiA of disappear fear

SONiA continually strives to “disappear fear” and spread her message of peace, whether in miklats (bomb shelters) in Israel, summer camps in Palestine, Human Rights Events, colleges, festivals or venues around the world. She spells her name with a small “i” to remind herself of her place in the world. Moving through “different beats, whether it’s a hip-hop thing, a Latin thing or something else,” she refers to her style as Americana dance music. Sisters SONiA & CiNDY [Rutstein] created the Folk-Pop duo, disappear fear in 1987, a name originally conceived for a Baltimore rape crisis center at which SONiA worked. SONiA also has written several soundtracks for films; does commissioned artwork, including paintings and large murals; is currently composing a musical for a 2009 release; as well as a Blues CD. In keeping with her message of global harmony SONiA has created “Guitars for Peace” which helps bring Acoustic Guitars to children in war-torn countries. In addition, her label disappear records donates 18% of every song downloaded to the United Nations World Food Program to help end poverty around the globe. Press photos and more information about SONiA can be found at <http://disappearfear.com/home.html>.

John Flynn

Songwriter and activist John Flynn calls himself a “hopeful pessimist.” The pessimism comes from a clear-eyed assessment of the world we live in; the hope comes from a deep-rooted faith in the beauty and resilience of the human spirit. After establishing himself as a songwriter in the heart of the Nashville Music Row, John returned to his native Philadelphia where a mainstage appearance at the Philadelphia Folk Festival cemented his career. Awards and recognitions include the American Library Association’s Notable Recording Award; songs for Tiny Tears, a documentary premiered at the United Nations and screened at The Cannes Film Festival; and an appearance at the first 2007 National League Eastern Division Playoff game. He volunteers with a men's discussion group in a maximum security prison and is a devoted supporter of Camp Dreamcatcher, an organization that provides a safe haven for children living with HIV/AIDS. LisaBeth Weber & Maggie Marshall LisaBeth Weber's mission is to make a difference through her art, music, and writing. Maggie Marshall, her "best friend and singing partner," brings high lonesome harmony and stellar upright bass playing to the duo. LisaBeth was a solo artist for many years playing around the Philadelphia region and received national airplay with two of her songs on NPR's Cartalk before she and Maggie began performing together seven years ago. Besides Maggie's roots influence, LisaBeth credits the movie, "O Brother, Where Art Thou?" for taking her song-writing style in an "old-timey" direction. The consummate Renaissance woman, LisaBeth is also a freelance writer and artist, recognized nationally for her efforts in spreading awareness of crucial matters in social justice, cancer prevention, women's issues, politics, and the environment. Press photos and more information about LisaBeth Weber & Maggie Marshall can be found at <http://www.myspace.com/lisabethandmaggie>.

Cheryl Prashker

Cheryl Prashker is often described within the folk music community as "percussionist extraordinaire" and a better description couldn't be found. She's toured with Jonathan Edwards, Pat Wictor, Red Molly, and Ellis; recorded with Wictor, Zoë Mulford, and Charlie Zahm; and has jumped in to play with countless performers passing through the Northeast area including Peter Yarrow, Tracy Grammar, and many others. She's been part of the bands CC Railroad, Full Frontal Folk, So's Your Mom, Whiskey Run, Earth Radio, and, currently, The Strangelings. Her genres are as diverse as her performance experiences including klezmer, classical, Sousa, jazz, Middle Eastern and folk. Now living in Philadelphia with husband (and frequent collaborator) Charles Nolan, Cheryl is one of the most sought after studio and touring musicians in the Northeast. She is also a teacher, songwriter, sound engineer, and record producer. Press photos and more information about Cheryl Prashker can be found at <http://www.cherylprashker.com>.
